Press Release

November 2007

World Day of Remembrance for Road Traffic Victims

is on the third Sunday of each November

this year on 18 November 2007 with the message:

“Remember and Reflect; Remember and Respond”

Each year, more than 1.3 million lives are claimed on the world’s roads, with tens of millions injured – adding countless millions of bereaved and maimed to the enormous numbers of those already affected. The cumulative toll is truly tremendous.

All those killed and injured and their families and friends, together with those who help in the aftermath, will be remembered on World Day of Remembrance for Road Traffic Victims. This special day was adopted by the United Nations on 26 October 2005 after road victim organisations under the umbrella of the European Federation of Road Traffic Victims (FEVR) had initiated, observed and publicised this day in many countries for more than 10 years.

This year, World Day will be observed on every continent – with relevant government departments, institutions and organisations joining the many road victim and trauma organisations in holding religious and secular events and ceremonies – from church services and prayers to marches, exhibitions, concerts and demonstrations. Countless newspaper articles have already announced the Day and its significance.*

Several worldwide initiatives are also being launched and promoted in 2007:

- “A Light of Hope” initiative – asking people the world over to burn a light in memory of road crash victims on World Day, but especially from 6pm to 8pm

  A ‘Transfer of Light’ will take place between continents, in Europe from France to Italy, where many important public buildings, including the Capitol in Rome, will be lit ‘to symbolically light a very serious social problem from which the spotlight can’t be turned off until a solution is found’, then to Mexico

- International Coalition Against Road Trauma (ICART), an informal network of organizations, institutions and individuals who wish to see road trauma, the major epidemic of the present times, managed, minimized and prevented. A national Coalition Against Road Trauma was launched on World Day 2004 in Portugal and it is envisaged that similar coalitions in individual countries will combine into the International Coalition ICART, being launched by FEVR.

- A call for ‘A Day without road crashes’ on World Day - this call comes from ASIRT in the US, where the Congress has this year officially recognised the World Day of Remembrance.
Brigitte Chaudhry, FEVR President, said on behalf of the Federation:

“We, who represent road crash victims and have struggled for the recognition of their plight and suffering for so many years, greatly welcome the present developments surrounding our World Day. Sudden violent deaths and injuries through road crashes deserve reflection and action by everyone in the world, so that they are brought to an absolute minimum, if not stopped altogether.”

Fiji Coral Coast – the National Road Safety Council will mark World Day with events at Namata on Saturday, with theme ‘Road deaths shatter lives’ and a minute silence.

Why the need to remember and acknowledge the loss and suffering?

Road deaths and injuries are not treated as seriously as other transport disasters, and road victims receive little help and acknowledgement. FEVR’s study into the impact of road crashes has revealed an enormous level of suffering, which was found to be compounded by the casual treatment of road death and injury by the legal system, the authorities, and society as a whole.

Why does the worldwide scale of road death and injury concern us all?

The global scale of more than 3,500 road deaths daily must concern us wherever we are, since we all travel to other countries and cannot avoid using the roads – therefore we need to make a concerted effort to address all the causes of crashes, for which the prerequisite is a serious crash investigation in every case. FEVR is calling for minimum national investigation standards, with aim of international ones.

UN calls for recognition of World Day

The UN, in Resolution 60/5, Invites Member States and the international community to recognize the third Sunday in November of every year as the World Day of Remembrance for Road Traffic Victims as the appropriate acknowledgement for victims of road traffic crashes and their families.
